ABOUT THIS WALK...

This walk explores Charvil Country Park with its lakes and woodlands reclaimed from old gravel workings and now havens for wildlife.

You’ll also see some magnificent examples of Brunel’s railway viaducts spanning the many branches of the River Loddon.

HOW TO GET HERE...

By car: just South of the A4, at the junction of the A321 and A3032. Easily accessible from the M4 via J8/9 or J10.

By bus: on the Arriva 850 Reading - High Wycombe route and Thames Travel route 128 Reading - Wokingham.

By train: services from Reading, Henley, Maidenhead and further afield. See www.nationalrail.co.uk for train times.

Visit the Twyford website for plenty more information on the village and its surroundings...

EXPLORE TWYFORD...

As its name suggests, Twyford developed where two branches of the River Loddon could be safely crossed. This crossing point was instrumental in attracting trade and travellers between the west of England and London, firstly with pack-horses, then wagons and stagecoaches. The village developed further with the arrival of the railway from London in 1838.

Twyford’s long history has left a rich legacy of old and interesting buildings, with numerous inns and hostels built to serve the travellers. But it is a very compact and ‘walkable’ village, home to a bustling community with a good range of shops, schools and all essential facilities.

Surrounding the village is a network of paths and bridleways exploring attractive undulating countryside along the banks of the River Loddon, Broadwater and the surrounding lakes.

An easy walk past lakes and woodlands. Don’t forget binoculars and a bird book!
3 Once past the lake and in open grassland again, fork left on the path towards a wooden footbridge and the arches of the railway viaduct. (The section of Brunel’s railway from Twyford to Reading involved not only these viaducts over the many branches of the Loddon but deep excavations of Sonning Cutting through solid chalk. Work on the Cutting meant that Twyford was the temporary terminus of the mainline from 1838 to 1840.)

5 After 500yds, the path bends right and there is a wooden kissing gate on the left. If you wish to visit The Lands End Inn or look at the ford, then drop down to Whistley Mill Lane here. If not, continue following the path in a clockwise direction around the lake. The paths may subdivide somewhat but continue heading at first towards the railway line and then veering right to walk parallel to the railway, now on your left. Head towards the railway arch used previously.

6 After returning through the arch, turn immediately to the left, walking parallel to the railway. This good path becomes a tarmac road and is a reminder of the former gravel extraction. Just before reaching Park Lane, take a narrower tarmac path on the right past a car park, sports facilities and a school continuing clockwise, on a sandy path, past East Park Farm pavilion on the left and wooden fencing and football pitches on the right.

7 When the sandy path veers off left into the housing estate, look for the footpath sign ahead and follow the grassy path as it sweeps left through an avenue of trees. The housing estate is still close-by on the left for a while but then the path continues straight ahead across open grassland. As you reach a gap in some trees and come near to the lakeside by a small bridge, veer left to go around the trees in a clockwise direction and soon the junction of paths at point 2 will be seen. Continue straight ahead with the factory buildings now on the right to exit onto the Old Bath Road and thence back to the starting point.

4 mile walk past lakes and woodlands reclaimed from old gravel workings. Alternative access from Lands End Inn or East Park Farm car park.
